fellow wints a hair-oul, he goes out on the firing line, where he, also, gets a close shave.

The firing line takes a large amount of space here. There is no rear, it's all iront, and it this was keeps up, all this section of the globe will have to be settled again, for there will have to be settled again, for there will be nobody left to build up the country.

General Curlo Patkin's army is off in the neghborhood of. Hung Den resting, General Curlo says his men need a rest after such iong continued running.

In going over the battlefield of Chow Chow we came across a young Jap soulier breathing his last. In his hind he held a letter, which he handed us with tears in his eyes, and asked us to give it to the person to whom it was addressed. There is plain Japaneses letters, on fleets of tea paper was writtin.

"MARI ANNI SAN, TOKYO."

Our learr went out to the brave little Jap, and thoughts of our own Mary Ann San, many miles away, came to us. We petured Mari Anni San sitting at her casement window, looking through the bamboo lattlee work, far out toward Port Arthur with sad thoughts of the tea she would miss this summer, while her brave Nanki Poo fit and bied for his Mikado. "I no more light," said Nanki Foo, "Ifo too dear to me, to keep it for myself, when I can give it to my Mikado. Then he turned over and his soul passed away to the lity field and the garden of the unselfish lad sang:

'Oh, great Mikado, ruler of my land, Be kind, and be gentle to my Mari Anni

"Oh, great Mikado, ruler of my land, Be kind and be gentle to my Mari Anni San"

San!

And as the gathering shade of heaven cast a gentle sheet over the carthly remains of the little Jap, we scarcely had time to get back to our bamboo tree before a hyddic shell burst over the forts of Port Arthur, and we could faintly hear the cries of battle and carnage, as the contesting armies ran against each other in their efforts to grab Manchuria.

We shall make an effort to-morrow to swim across the bay to Pat Arhur, so we can give our friends at home a true account of what's geing on in that place.

Short Talks To Advertisers.

No. 22

Don't expect the newspaper to do it all. The newspaper can bring your advertisement to the attention of the public—c.n. In fact, almost force the public to read it, but much of the responsibility of giving the Ad. "pulling power" rests on you. No matter how great the circulation of the newspaper, your advertisement will fail far short of the good it might do unless it is carefully prepared, attractively worded and so written as to tell in a pointed way just the information which you wish to import. Many advertisers have no plan of system in regard to their anvertising, but let it go in a hap-hazard sort of a way and thus fail to receive the full benefit. One strong point in favor of Tee-Dee Wants is that they are easy to prepare and require but little system on the part of the advertiser, but even they should be written carefully and thoughtfully and changed frequently. fully and changed frequently.
